Visiting Faculty

Five visiting faculty members are teaching at the School of Law in 2004-05.

Leonard Gross, professor of law at Southern Illinois University, will teach Legal Profession this fall. He is the author or co-author of Remedies: Damages, Equity, and Restitution; Organizing Corporate and Other Business Enterprises; and Supreme Court Appointments: Judge Bork and the Politicization of Senate Confirmations. Gross earned his bachelor’s degree in history from the State University of New York at Binghamton and his JD from Boston University.

Glynn S. Lunney, Jr., professor of law at Tulane University, will teach Copyright & Related Rights and Trademarks & Unfair Competition in spring 2005. His research and teaching interests focus on intellectual property, law and economics, contracts, antitrust, and the just compensation clause of the United States Constitution. Lunney holds a bachelor’s degree in petroleum engineering from Texas A&M University and a JD from Stanford University; he is completing his doctorate in economics at Tulane University.

Peter Salsich, Jr., the McDonnell Professor of Justice in American Society at Saint Louis University, will teach Real Estate Transactions this fall. He formerly edited the American Bar Association’s Journal of Affordable Housing and Community Development Law, chaired the ABA Commission on Homelessness and Poverty, and served on the Council of the ABA Section of Real Property, Probate & Trust Law. Salsich earned his bachelor’s degree in English from Notre Dame University and his JD from Saint Louis University.

Nicolas P. Terry, professor of law and co-director of the Center for Health Law Studies at Saint Louis University, will teach Health Care Quality and Liability in spring 2005. He is the co-author of Problems in Insurance Law; Cases, Materials & Problems in the Law of Torts and Products Liability: Cases, Material, Problems. Terry is also the co-editor-in-chief of the Journal of Health Law. He holds a bachelor’s degree from Kingston University and an LLM from the University of Cambridge.

Douglas R. Williams, professor of law at Saint Louis University, will teach Administrative Law in spring 2005. His teaching interests are concentrated in the areas of administrative law, constitutional law, environmental law, land use controls, natural resources law, and torts. Williams has written numerous articles on environmental law. He earned a bachelor’s degree from Augustana College, as well as a master’s degree in history and a JD from Duke University.

Karen Cassidy Hired to Develop Grants

As the School of Law’s new grant development manager, Karen Cassidy is working to secure grants supporting research, education, and community services related to the law and legal institutions. Responsible for identifying funding opportunities and coordinating overall grant efforts, she also serves as liaison to Washington University’s Corporate and Foundation Relations Office and Research Office.

Her new position was created to assist the School in obtaining grants that will support various programs, including the School’s Whitney R. Harris Institute for Global Legal Studies, Center for Interdisciplinary Studies, Clinical Education Program, and Interdisciplinary Institute for Children and Youth.

Before joining the law school, Cassidy, AB ’88, owned and operated a grant-writing consulting business. She previously held positions with the Salvation Army in St. Louis, United Way of Greater St. Louis, United States Representative Richard Gephardt, and United States Representative Bob Wise.