

International Justice & Conflict Resolution Practicum

International Human Rights: A Global Pursuit

By Sarah Placzek, JD/MSW '10

BEFORE ENTERING LAW SCHOOL and graduate school in social work, I was a Peace Corps volunteer in Timor-Leste, and it whet my appetite to work internationally. Although my stint was interrupted by civil unrest, the experience confirmed my belief that law and social work could be combined to effectively support peace and human development in post-conflict nations. Once I arrived at Washington University, I pursued opportunities to foster my goal of a career in international human rights.

Following my first year of law school, I did a summer internship at the Legal Resources Centre in Accra, Ghana, through the Africa Public Interest Law Initiative, coordinated by Professors Karen Tokarz and Kimberly Norwood. I engaged in human rights education with various community-based organizations working to gain better access to health care and to combat repressive widowhood rites.

As an intern with the United Nations Inter-Agency Project on Human Trafficking (UNIAP) in Bangkok, Thailand, after my second year, I assisted in the design and implementation of a research study aimed at assessing the influx of Cambodian deportees from Thailand and establishing the level of unidentified or misidentified trafficking victims within these deportees. I also initiated a media project that would enable victims entering shelters to gain more information about their rights through an illustrative video available in multiple languages.

Sarah Placzek, JD/MSW '10, says her international clinical experiences including in Ghana, have inspired her to pursue a career in international human rights. Her capstone experience was her semester-long externship through the International Justice & Conflict Resolution Practicum, which matches clinic students with international courts and conflict resolution agencies in Africa, Asia, and Europe.

My capstone learning experience, however, was my semester externship in the spring of my fourth year at the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda in the Appeals and Legal Advisory Division within the Office of the Prosecutor. I received this assignment through the law school's new International Justice & Conflict Resolution Practicum, facilitated by Professors Karen Tokarz and Leila Nadya Sadat.

Being a small part of the tribunal's work provided invaluable insight into the challenges Rwanda and the international community face in working to end impunity and support lasting peace. I realized the historic significance of the tribunal for setting a strong precedent for the International Criminal Court and national jurisdictions; there is much to learn from the tribunal's achievements, as well as its disappointments.

MY SEMESTER at the tribunal also provided practical work experience relevant to both domestic and international legal work—I conducted legal research and analysis, drafted appellate briefs, participated in oral advocacy training, and practiced on a multinational team.

I had amazing international learning experiences through the law school in large part because of the support and professional connections of my international and clinical faculty mentors. I am grateful for these unique learning experiences and the many efforts of my professors to ensure international opportunities designed to advance my career goal.

After graduation, I accepted a two-year clerkship with a judge on the Missouri Court of Appeals in my hometown, Springfield, Missouri, where my brother, sister, and father, Mathew Placzek, JD '73, practice law. I am enjoying this period of time to refine my research skills, reconnect with my family, and refuel for what I hope is a meaningful career in international human rights. ■■■

Former international extern Sarah Placzek, JD/MSW '10, is currently clerking for Judge William W. Francis, Jr. of the Missouri Court of Appeals for the Southern District.

Supervised Practicum

School Offers Supervised Practicum, Related Public Service Experiences

CURRENT CLINIC STUDENTS have the opportunity to design an experiential learning opportunity under the supervision of a faculty member through the Supervised Practicum. Externships typically involve field placements in legal settings, such as legal services or other nonprofit law offices. Students may also teach law to others, such as through the Women & the Law class for undergraduates.

Law students also have the opportunity to work with clinic and other faculty members as research assistants and may take advantage of a full array of summer public interest internship placements, such as those through the American Indian Law Program and Africa Public Interest Law Initiative.