GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE
The government is comprised of the executive, legislative and judicial branches. The head of the executive branch is the President; the First and Second Vice Presidents serve under the President. The legislature is comprised of a unicameral National Assembly (Asamblea Nacional) with 78 seats (in 2009 the number of seats will decrease to 71). The members are elected by popular vote to serve five-year terms.

LEGISLATIVE PROCESS
The Panamanian Legislature is in session for two four-month terms annually. Additional special terms may be called by the President. The legislature may create, modify, or repeal laws, ratify treaties, declare war, decree amnesty for political offenses, establish the national currency, raise taxes, ratify government contracts, approve the national budget, and impeach members of the executive or judicial branches.

The legislature has significant legal and practical limitations on its control of the budget and the military. Because the legislators are elected by parties who may revoke their status as legislators, and because the legislative term runs concurrently with the presidential term, there are significant political checks on legislative enactments.

ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS

ADMINISTRATIVE SOURCES
Regulations are incorporated into the administrative code itself, the Codigo Administrativo, with amendments published in the Gaceta Oficial. This is much more than a basic administrative code. It also contains framework laws covering citizenship and nationality, the structure of the government and political system, public security, communications, copyright, etc. A great variety of diverse laws are fit into the code.

CASE LAW

JUDICIAL OVERVIEW
The Supreme Court consists of nine justices, elected to ten-year terms. The justices jointly hear constitutional cases, but are divided into three-justice panels to hear cases in their sections which include Civil, Criminal, Contentious-Administrative, and General Affairs. In the civil context, below the Supreme Court are the appellate level courts which are known as the Civil Superior Justice Tribunals. There are two divisions of trial courts: civil circuit courts and municipal judges. Additionally, there are two courts of special jurisdiction: the family law court and the admiralty court. In the criminal context, the structure is similar in that there are municipal trial judges and circuit courts with appellate Criminal Superior Justice Tribunals. There is also a special labor jurisdiction.

REPORTER
