Do you need help with legal research and writing projects?

- Research and drafting of memoranda or briefs
- State surveys of the statutes and case law for a particular issue
- Research legislative history of a statute
- Last minute research during trial or for an oral argument

Experienced Washington University Law students and recent graduates are the perfect answer throughout the year. Our unique National Legal Project Bank was designed for small and midsize law firms as well as government and public interest organizations. You now have access to excellent legal assistance throughout the year without hiring a permanent intern or associate. Simply and quickly connect with students eager to gain experience in a particular area of practice or geographic region. Students can work remotely and our office will facilitate any video or telephone conferences the project may require.

What is the National Legal Project Bank and how does it work?

It is a simple way for students to virtually complete research and writing projects you need done throughout the year. Students check the Legal Project Bank constantly so you can get help even with short deadlines. Only Washington University Law students can access the postings.

- Students gain experience and contacts in the community and/or area of practice they are seeking.
- You have access to excellent legal research and writing skills while helping to mentor students.

To get started:

- Post the project at: http://law.wustl.edu/career_services/jobbank/projectform.asp
- Determine the compensation. (Pro bono is an option for public interest, government or pro bono cases).
- Print the confirmation screen and keep your project id number.
- Students will respond with a short cover email and resume only.
- Contact the candidate you select and make specific arrangements for completion of the project.

A Nationally Recognized Top 25 School

3,688 – Number of Applicants
261 – Number of Students Enrolled
167 (94th Percentile) – Median LSAT
3.7 – Median GPA
27 – Percentage Minority Students