For more than nine months, Outside the Lines Reporter John Barr conducted dozens of interviews with sources within South Africa and around the world: from law enforcement, government agencies, research institutes and advocacy groups, to the pimps and prostitutes who work the brothels and streets of South African cities as they prepared to host the World Cup. The OTL investigation included the use of undercover footage, shot from within the South African sex industry. The reporting led to multiple sources who said many, many young people were trafficked into South Africa from other countries, or internally, to work in a sex industry that grew rapidly in the run up to the World Cup. This presentation will discuss these issues and more.

John Barr, Reporter, ESPN Outside the Lines

For more information, contact Professor Linda B. Cottler, PhD, MPH, Director, EPRG, cottler@epi.wustl.edu.