The Right to a Remedy in International Law

Dinah Shelton will examine the development of international human rights and international criminal law, insofar as both now recognize the right to reparations for victims of human rights violations, international crimes, and abuses of power. Shelton will also look at related case law and some of the problems with the international decisions addressing those issues.

Dinah Shelton is the Patricia Roberts Harris Research Professor of Law at George Washington University Law School. Before joining George Washington in 2004, she taught international law and was director of the doctoral program in international human rights law at the University of Notre Dame Law School (1996-2004). Shelton is the author of three prize-winning books and has also served as a legal consultant to the United Nations Environment Programme, UNITAR, World Health Organization, European Union, Council of Europe, and Organization of American States.
